(KEVIN T. stands and turns around to a group of people looking at a TV)

KEVIN T.

And nobody moves. Even the people outside are standing still. And I look up at the TVs and realize — it's a national moment of silence in America. And all these Newfoundlanders — these people from another country — they maintain that moment of silence. I don't know if that would happen back home — at a busy gas station on the main drag — but it happened here.
